Article 33. There are two types of shareholder meetings of the company.

- (1) The annual general meeting occurs once annually, within four months following the conclusion of the company's fiscal year.

(2) Extraordinary meetings, distinct from the annual gathering, may be convened.

Shareholder meetings of the company may be conducted electronically, adhering strictly to regulations, protocols, and legal stipulations concerning electronic gatherings. These include security measures and information standards mandated by law, encompassing current directives and any future amendments.

Determining which shareholder meetings occur via electronic media involve sending meeting invitations and documents via email. However, such electronic transmissions must comply with relevant legal guidelines.

Extraordinary meetings may be initiated by:

(a) A committee empowered to convene such gatherings at any time.

(b) One or more shareholders, collectively possessing at least 10 percent of the total shares, may petition the board of directors to call an extraordinary meeting. Such requests must clearly outline the purpose and rationale for the meeting. The board must then arrange the gathering within 45 days of receiving the petition.

Should the committee fail to organize a meeting within the stipulated timeframe, shareholders meeting the requisite criteria may independently call a meeting within 45 days of the deadline's expiration. In this scenario, the gathering is deemed to be called by the board of directors, and the company bears the associated costs. If a shareholder-initiated meeting lacks the attendance necessary to establish a quorum, as specified in section 34, the shareholders responsible for calling the meeting must collectively cover the expenses incurred by the company.

Article 34. When convening a shareholder meeting, shareholders and proxies (if any) must attend with a minimum of 25 individuals or less than half of the total number of shareholders, and shares representing no less than one-third of the total shares must be present. This ensures that a quorum is achieved.

If, after 1 hour from the scheduled start time, it becomes apparent that the attendance does not meet the specified quorum requirement, the shareholder meeting will not proceed. If the meeting was convened at the shareholders' request, it will be adjourned. However, suppose the meeting was not called at the shareholders' request. In that case, a new meeting will be scheduled, and shareholders will receive an invitation at least seven days before the latest meeting date. A quorum will not be necessary for the subsequent meeting.

If the Chairman is absent or unable to fulfill their responsibilities, the Vice Chairman assumes the role of Chairman. - (1) Each shareholder is entitled to one vote per share they hold.
- (2) Shareholders must allocate all their votes, as described in (1), to elect one or multiple directors. However, votes cannot be fragmented among individuals.
- (3) Directors are elected in descending order of votes received, with those receiving the highest votes securing positions. In instances where the subsequent candidate gets an equal number of votes, surpassing the available director positions, or in the event of a tie during an election, the chairman of the meeting will cast an additional vote to break the deadlock.

Article 17: During each annual general meeting, one-third of the directors will retire from their positions, or the closest number to one-third if the total number of directors is not divided by three.
